Y43 1998g OCLC Number: ocm41103858 Subject: Year 2000 date conversion (Computer systems) -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 11 What we find at the present time this quarter - in fact, as of just a couple weeks ago in our latest status survey - we find that small companies throughout the world in this under 2, 000 employee category are anywhere from not started at all up to approximately the end of level II, which means that they have gotten some great extent of their inventory completed. That is the range throughout the world as far as small companies. The mid-size companies run the range from being about halfway through their inventory activities up to and including having as much as ten to 20 percent of their internal systems fixed and have started testing. So it is a pretty wide range on the mid-size companies as well. And the large companies, over 20, 000 employees, run the range from the end of level II, which means that they have basically nearly completed their thorough inventory of business processes as well as their internal IT systems, all the way up to having as much as 70 to 80 percent of their internal systems fully remediated and are well into the test phase. Now, this means if we were to look at actual timeframes, we find that it takes - and this is a pretty important fact to us - it takes an average of 30 months for a mid-size company or government agency to complete their systems, mission critical systems, that they identify as mission critical. That means that unfortunately it takes about 6 months under 3 years to get...
