They were unthrifty and quarrelsome, boasting that they were born of the original breed of alligator, horse, and snapping turtle. Their favorite practice of fighting was gouging the eye with the thumb after entwining the fingers in the hair of the opponent. They gave an ill reputation to the Mississippi region, and from them the Illinois regulators and kindred bands were recruited, as described later in connection with the Mormons. Some of the better class brought their slaves with them, although contrary to the Ordinance of 1787. This caused a violent contest when the territory became a state and the constitutional prohibition of slavery was secured only by a strong effort. Likewise in Indiana, the southern element petitioned Congress to abrogate the anti-slavery provision in the old Ordinance and again attempted in vain to perpetuate slavery when a constitution was formed. Both French...
